Dear Henry:

I appreciated your letter of November 13 which reached me just as I had returned from a trip abroad.

I have made no commitments with regard to writing or publishing and shall not do so until after I have turned in my suit here. I know what a job Houghton Mifflin could do and that they were my Grandfather's publishers.

Until I know whether I can write and how and what, I shall not be making any commitments.

Sincerely,

Allen W. Dulles
